

DUTCH ANDERSON SLAIN BY OFFICER

MAY HEAR CABINET OFFICERS

MITCHELL DEFENSE DEMANDS IMPOSING ARRAY OF WITNESSES

Secretaries Are Subpoenaed
Among 73 Before
Court Martial

Washington, Nov. 2.—An imposing array of witnesses including cabinet officers and other high government army and navy officials was demanded by the defense when the court martial of Col. William Mitchell, convened for its fourth day today.

Subpoenas for seventy-three witnesses in all were asked, indicating an effort by counsel for the flying Colonel to delve into every phase of military and naval administration as well as to revive the subject of the naval disasters in recent months.

The witnesses asked included: Secretary of the Navy Wilbur, Secretary of War Davis.

Everett Sanders, secretary to the president.

Dwight Morrow, chairman of the special air board.

Secretary of Agriculture Jardine.

Benedict Crowell, former assistant secretary of war.

Captain Anton Heinen, German dirigible constructor.

Mrs. Zachary Lansdowne, widow of the late commander of the ill-fated Shenandoah.

Donald MacMillan, head of the Arctic expedition.

Members of the house aircraft committee.

The list did not include President Coolidge the defense having abandoned its tentative plan to ask for his summons because of the little likelihood he could be made to testify.

The defense in asking the summonses stipulated that Wilbur should produce correspondence between Commander Lansdowne and the Navy department regarding the fatal flight of the Shenandoah; copies of the orders relative to the use of parachutes on dirigibles; data on the origin of the navy press service and invitations to newspapermen to attend the recent Hawaiian maneuvers.

Among other witnesses, asked by Mitchell, were:

Admiral Hilary P. Jones, chief of the Shenandoah inquiry board and of the navy general board.

Admiral W. A. Moffatt, chief of the Naval Bureau of Aeronautics.

Lieut. Leigh Wade, round the world flyer.

Lieut. V. E. Bertrandias, Dayton, Ohio.

Lieut. E. L. Eubanks, Dayton, O.

Major F. M. Kennedy, Dayton, O.

Capt. Lowe Smith, round the world flyer, California.

After Reid presented his list Col. Sherman Moreland, trial judge advocate, made a brief statement outlining what he claimed to be violation of army regulations by Mitchell. He referred to that part of Mitchell's San Antonio statement which spoke of "incompetence, criminal negligence and almost treasonable administration of the national defense by the war and navy departments" and several other passages claiming all were "conduct prejudicial to the good order and military discipline."

On the basis of a statement by Moreland that he would employ the entire Mitchell statement in showing violations, Reid objected to his reading excerpts. This led to a squabble between Moreland and Reid which finally resulted in a motion by Reid to strike out the charges and specifications.

The suits, according to Kreitzer, will be brought on behalf of Mr. and Mrs. Kinder, property owners, for an "accounting as to omitted personal returns."

"These returns", Kreitzer declared "are deposited in the building and loan association vaults in the way of money and credit belonging to residents of Dayton and have been omitted from the tax duplicates."

Kreitzer said his suits would seek to enjoin the county auditor from certifying Dayton's personal tax duplicates "until the heretofore omitted returns are placed upon said duplicates."

The suits, if filed, were expected to cause a sensation in business and financial circles.

TRAINMEN WANT WAGE INCREASE

Brotherhood Chiefs To Meet In Chicago Tuesday To Prepare Demands, Is Report—Cleveland Officials Deny Knowledge Of Plan.

Chicago, Nov. 2.—Chairmen of the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen are scheduled to meet here tomorrow to prepare the demands for a substantial wage increase according to word to the Railway Board today.

Several chairmen held a preliminary meeting yesterday.

The brotherhood has a membership totaling 180,000, employed on 200 class one railroads. Restoration of wartime wages may be demanded.

The other railroad brotherhoods also may ask for increased wages. New wage contracts between the brotherhoods and the railroads must be signed by the end of the year as the present contracts expire Dec. 31.

Railroad labor leaders are said to feel they will secure an increase being encouraged by the increased railroad earnings of the past few months.

Cleveland, Nov. 2.—Officials of the Brotherhood of Firemen and Engine-men and of the Locomotive Engineers declared today they knew nothing of any contemplated wage increase demands to be made by their two organizations.

However, David B. Robertson, president of the Firemen's Brotherhood, said a meeting would be held by the Four Brotherhoods in Chicago on Nov. 19, to discuss new wage scales.

NEAR-EAST HATRED OF WEST APPARENT IN SYRIAN TROUBLE

Britain Alarmed As De-posing of Shah Favors
Soviets

London, Nov. 2.—The Near East's hatred and fear of the West is cropping out in the trail of the Syrian disturbances, following French bombardment of Damascus.

Reports here today indicated the Syrian ferment is strengthening Arab anti-foreign agitation in Iraq, (presently held under a British mandate which Turkey disputes) — Palestine, Egypt and Morocco.

Politicians are urging special measures to safeguard Great Britain's prestige in her possessions and mandates throughout the Near East, particularly in view of the recent appeal of the Syro-Palestine congress, to the league of nations demanding immediate cancellations of the league mandates in the East, with authorization to Syria, Palestine and Lebanon to unite in a common government to enter the federation of Arab states.

The deposing of the Shah of Persia and the rise to power of Reza Khan, Persian premier, pending establishment of a new form of government in Persia also is viewed here as a movement perhaps unfavorable to England.

It is recalled that Soviet Russia long has sought to obtain dominating influence in Persia and it is felt that the deposition of the Shah aided Russia.

Incidentally it is pointed out, here that the Shah probably will make no move to regain his lost power and dominions. He has tasted of the flesh of the Continent and is enamored of the women, the gaming and other diversions offered by Paris and the French resorts.

Reports out of the Damascus region picture a tremendous increase in guerrilla warfare. The insurgents are reported to have occupied six towns and to have won reinforcements from sixteen other villages and nine Bedouin tribes.

Jamial Hussene at Jerusalem, one of the Syrian leaders, wired here that the French had bombarded six villages on the 28th of October and that Damascus is still perturbed at the situation. Four thousand women and foreigners are reported quitting the city daily.

French control was said to have been lost in the districts between Damascus and Homs.

Daily raids are reported from the Aleppo, Hama and Hauran districts.

It is planned to conduct post-graduate clinics in connection with the public clinics. Such clinics have been in progress in Illinois for some time, and it is said they have proved of much benefit to the public.

The Cincinnati Committee in charge of the clinics is composed of Dr. E. J. Hess, Dr. Clarence Kaufman and Dr. Joseph Wing. Optometry is described as the only profession dedicated to the preservation of visual efficiency. The state association of optometrists also has established an extension course in applied optics with the aid of the department of optometry at Ohio State University.

ONLY 30 PER CENT VOTE EXPECTED ON EVE OF STATE-WIDE ELECTION

Bitter Partisan Campaigns Apparently Fail To Arouse
Interest In Voting—Believe All Three State Amendments Will Fail.

Columbus, O., Nov. 2.—Despite bitter partisan campaigns, not more than 30 per cent of the qualified electors are expected to vote in tomorrow's state-wide election.

For the eleventh time since 1889, the voters will vote on an amendment proposing to abolish the uniform tax rule and to authorize taxation of intangible property. Two other amendments will be before the voters at the same time, one proposing four year terms for all state and county elective administrative officers and the other proposing to write the Griswold debt limitations law into the constitution.

The general belief among political observers today was that all three amendments will fail.

Leading advocates of the taxation amendment, however, insisted it will be approved by the voters, going so far as to predict its adoption by a 100,000 majority.

The amendment would allow taxation of intangible property at a lower rate than that now assessed against tangibles.

Strenuous campaigns have been waged in behalf of the amendment in an effort to overcome the long-seated prejudice that has existed in recent years.

Time and again similar measures have met crushing defeat. The last taxation amendment voted on was rejected by nearly 250,000 votes.

Governor Donahy and the Democratic state central committee have urged defeat of the taxation and four year term amendments. The Ohio Realm of the Ku Klux Klan has been instructed to support this stand while the republican state central committee has urged adoption of all three.

News of Painleve's intention was learned authoritatively by the United Press.

Painleve has been paying the way for resumption of the debt negotiations with the United States by having Foreign Minister Briand consult with American Ambassador Herick. Conferences held the last of the past week were resumed today.

DETECTIVE'S PREY IDENTIFIED AS PAL OF GERALD CHAPMAN

Fingerprints Identify Muskegon Counterfeiter as Murder Suspect

Muskegon, Mich., Nov. 2.—Chief of Police Peter F. Hansen, of Muskegon, announced this morning that the bandit who was slain in a revolver duel with Detective Charles Hammond Saturday night was Dutch Anderson, notorious bandit and former pal of Gerald Chapman, awaiting execution in Connecticut for the slaying of a New Britain policeman.

Hammond was rushed to a hospital where he died shortly after physicians performed an emergency operation.

Anderson was the partner of Gerald Chapman, "Prince of Bandits" in the famous "million dollar" hold-up of a mail truck in New York several years ago.

Both were later captured and sentenced to Atlanta penitentiary from which they escaped in a sensational jail delivery.

While Chapman was subsequently arrested in Muncie, Ind., and convicted of killing a patrolman in New Britain, Conn., during a store robbery there, Anderson successfully evaded capture.

Months following Chapman's conviction, Mr. and Mrs. Ben Hance, of Muncie, Ind., at whose home the bandit prince was arrested for the New Britain murder, were both murdered on a country road by bandits who escaped in an automobile. Anderson was accused of the murder.

Federal secret service circulars posted in postoffices throughout the country warned the "great caution should be exercised in any attempt to arrest Anderson, as he is a desperate criminal and likely to shoot his way out of any difficulty."

Identification of the slain bandit, Chief Hansen said, was effected through fingerprint tests made by Lieut. Roy Ferris. Patrolman Hammond was fatally injured in a hand-to-hand revolver fight with the bandit in a downtown district Saturday night.

The encounter followed a report to the police that a man had passed a counterfeit bill in a confectionery store.

Hammond overtook the bandit in a crowded downtown street and though fatally wounded, continued firing until he killed the man.

Counterfeit bills totaling more than $2,000 mostly in denominations of $20, were found wrapped in a newspaper on the outlaw's person.

The bandit died from three bullet wounds.

"There is no mistaking our identification," Chief Hansen told the United Press. "We will hold the body of Anderson until federal authorities arrive from Detroit and Grand Rapids."

Hammond caught up with the counterfeiter about a block and a half from the police station and told him to "come along to the police station."

As they neared the station, the prisoner whipped out a gun and fired twice, one of the bullets went high and the second shattered a cigar-store window. In the excitement following the bandit ran into a nearby alley with Hammond in pursuit. Catching up with the bandit, Hammond was just preparing to grapple with him when the bandit fired at point blank range, fatally wounding the policeman. Although shot through the lungs and liver, Hammond again grappled with the bandit, wrenched the revolver from him and killed the man instantly.

INTEREST LACKING ALTHOUGH ELECTION TUESDAY IMPORTANT

Although Xenians will go to the polls Tuesday to elect three city commissioners, two board of education members, a justice of the peace, three township trustees and a township clerk, the election is apparently attracting slight attention.

In addition to these offices to be filled, Xenians will vote on a three mill levy for five years for school purposes and are asked to pass an amendment to the city charter giving the mayor judicial powers in addition to the three proposed amendments to the state constitution.

Republicans gathered and are supporting the three state amendments while the objection to them voiced by the Democrats has been supplemented by an attack by the Ohio Realm, Ku Klux Klan. Xenia school authorities say public schools here cannot survive at present standards at least, unless the levy which has been in use four years is continued by vote Tuesday.

The charter amendment is designed to clarify the police judge tangle and will provide for municipal judicial powers. City administration says the charter amendment is the only solution to a difficult situation.

Two administration candidates are seeking re-election to the city commission. They are John W. Prugh and S. M. McKay. The former is serving an appointive term now while the latter won handily at the last election after filling a vacancy for a time. Charles E. Russell, James G.

Cowan, Perry A. Alexander and Karl R. Babb are independent candidates seeking the office for the first time. There are three commissioners to elect.

With two vacancies on the board of education, occasioned by the retirement of Jacob Kany and Harry D. Smith, three candidates are seeking the offices. They are James D. Adair, Mrs. J. H. Benbow and J. J. Stout. Little campaigning has developed.

Three township trustees seeking re-election are J. W. Hedges, Graham Bryson, and Ward Grant. Four independents after the same positions are Joseph Gattrell, James I. Patterson, Harry Siefert and Clarence Rile. J. H. McPherson and George McKee are opponents for the office of township clerk and E. J. Wilkins is unopposed for constable. For justice of the peace, J. E. Jones is opposed for re-election by A. C. Garwood.

Outside of Xenia in Greene County, townships and villages will elect respective officeholders, some from tickets and others from names written in. The county as a whole will elect three members to the county education board. W. B. Bryson, J. E. Hastings and A. E. Fisher are incumbents seeking re-election. They are opposed by Clyde Conklin, George S. Smith and H. S. Noggle.

Bath, Caesarcreek and Ross Township school districts are offering special bond issues to be voted upon Tuesday. Polls will open at 5:30 a.m. and close at 5:30 p.m. In spite of the local issues, authorities do not expect a heavy vote.

COMING OF XMAS SHOPPING DAYS SPURS INTEREST IN MERCHANTS AUTO CONTEST

Forty-five shopping days 'til Christmas!

These words have added significance to entrants in the Detroit Street Merchants' Association contest. On the night of the close of the contest, December 24, a Willys-Knight Coupe sedan and nine wonderful cash prizes will be awarded the first ten contestants in the race.

With the quick passage of the weeks Xenia shoppers are giving added fervor to their efforts and are enlisting friends and relatives in the collection of contest coupons. Several organizations have entered the race, since pooling of votes has been permitted and this has only increased interest in the event.

Increased business that is always noted with the approach of winter and the holiday buying season, has been marked by increased trading this year, since the inception of the Detroit Street Merchants' contest.

Sales people in business houses entered in the contest are busy keeping track of the votes and every purchase is wrapped up together with the votes. Members of the Merchants' association are pleased with the progress of the contest and are congratulating themselves on the plan adopted as an interest stimulus to business preceding the holidays.

Rivalry in the contest will grow with the lessening in the length of time for the contest. The days immediately preceding Christmas are expected to be featured with hurried contesting and every effort will be made by entrants to carry off the first prize or at least one of the remaining cash gifts.

MODISH MITZI—Mitzi Is Being Shadowed

By JAY V. JAY

Slowly, slowly Mitzi turns her head just as if she were reading the sign on the street corner, but really to see if it is the same gentleman behind her who was behind her three blocks away. It is, and he is looking at her coat her sheared lamb coat. It is worth looking at, but it is rather disconcerting to have it inspected for blocks and blocks.

This is strange. The Mysterious Stranger still follows; Mitzi's hat is very new and any one might expect an interest in it without ulterior motive. Mitzi would like to find out just what his motives are without inviting a personal parley. Perhaps he isn't following her at all. She will go shopping and see.

Right through the Millinery Department, walks Mitzi. Not far behind saunters the Mysterious Stranger. He looks neither to right or left. Not hat, no slip, nothing but Mitzi appears to interest him. That is not unusual but Mitzi wants to test his earnest purpose further. She knows a way.

If he is shadowing her with stern resolve, he will follow her into the Lingerie Department. That's a test for a man. Mitzi stops before a show case displaying a nightgown with a wide berth collar. Then he looks around. The Mysterious Stranger is not looking at the lingerie, he's looking at Mitzi. Now what conclusion would you draw? Well, draw it.

GEOGRAPHICAL ATTRACTIONS.

MAGAZINE and newspaper readers have been surprised in recent months by a succession of articles, interviews and statements by Americans as to why they are living in the United States or abroad, as the case may be, and by Europeans and Asians as to why they are living in the United States or their native countries.

Here is a subject of interest to all irrespective of nationality, race or color. It embodies an appeal to the ardent nationalist and the professed internationalist. At the same time it is a subject which might be distorted by prejudices and fallacious convictions unless presented in symposium.

A London critic finds the European atmosphere most salubrious because his visits to the United States have convinced him that there is neither liberty nor freedom in the Land of the Free. Another writer, of American parentage but born abroad, lives in the United States to evade association with those American tourists whom he complains ruined for him his years of study and professional endeavor abroad. A proponent of New World residence grows red in the face when he thinks of the red tape, with which every European tourist is entangled, smothered and delayed, of European living conditions and of foreign politics.

So every year witnesses more Europeans establishing permanent residences in the United States and more Americans making homes for themselves in England, France, Italy and elsewhere because they have found their "heart's desire" in their adopted country. And yet, though they may disagree on other things, all concede that the place to make money is in the United States and the other New World countries. America is a provident haven of workers and the inspiration of business and industrial genius. Old World offerings call to the unimaginative peasant, the student, the artist and wealth.

COST OF OVER-FATIGUE.

THERE is needed no proof for the assertion that where fatigue is excessive and prolonged the body loses its resistance to disease and physical ills become frequent. But what we do need is some authoritative information on how much is lost to us from fatigue, and how serious on a national scale this affliction may become.

In the matter of the length of the work-day the recent report of the Health Service establishes definitely that the greater amount of over-fatigue resulting from the long work day brings more accidents from the normal work day. There is, we are told, apparently in plant-production a law of diminishing returns for energy spent, and a point is reached beyond which labor becomes less profitable.

Significant, too, is the estimated loss from fatigue to the 400,000,000 workers in the United States. For a period of 300 days the output of 1,600,000 workers is lost each year. At five dollars a day this totals $2,400,000,000. Although this purports to be a conservative estimate, even if it were an over-statement it is serious enough to consider.

UP TO PARENTS.

THE announcement of the intention of the American Federation of Teachers to work for a universal compulsory education law for all children under 18 years of age as a remedy for juvenile delinquency appears to be based on the assumption that moral delinquency may be prevented by quantity rather than the quality of the instruction. It may be desirable that no child be permitted to end its schooling until the age specified, but adding a year or more to the compulsory age will not of itself operate to attain the end sought.

It is said that in adequately educated young persons are revealed to grow delinquent morally as well as industrial and commercial advance, but by no means all of education is in the schools. By far the more valuable part is received in the home, if it be had at all. More schooling might help much but it would not do all desired in diminishing delinquency. If the right kind of principles are inculcated even though schooling be ended before one is 18 there is very little peril of lapsing into delinquency.

Just Folks

BY EDWARD A. GUEST

SPEAKING OF LOSSES
Speaking of losses, look at these.
Which I have suffered through the years.

Observe how swiftly fortune flees
However guarded it appears;
Time was that I was rich and proud
And feared no shadow that could fall.

I was with priceless gifts endowed,
But somehow I have lost them all.

I've lost my appetite for pie,
I've lost the strength I once possessed.

I've lost the baseball batting eye
With which my days of sport were blest;

I've lost that old-time hunger which Made every meal a rare delight,
Time was that I was very rich,
For I slept soundly every night.

Through many a fortune I have run,
I've lost the charm in little things,
Now winter's cold or summer's sun
A loss of dreadful illness brings;

No more I mock at warnings grave
Or laugh at hurts which may befall,
Then I had strength, and I was brave,
But somehow I have lost it all.

I've lost the care-free way I had
When cares I thought would never meet.

come.
Instead of being always glad
There now are times when I am glum.
But still in spite of all I've lost,
And all that was and is no more
—And all that withered 'neath the frost
—Life still has charms at forty-four.

NEW PROPERTY LAW PROPOSED IN MEXICO ALARMS FOREIGNERS

Mexico City, Nov. 2.—Commercial circles in this city have been somewhat alarmed by the origin of a legislative project to regulate article twenty-seven, which pertains to the holding of real property in Mexico, so as to make it apply to stock companies and corporations as well as to individuals.

Article twenty-seven states that "only Mexicans by birth or naturalization can acquire dominion over lands, waters, etc. or obtain concessions to exploit mines, waters, or comparable titles within the republic; the State may concede the same rights to aliens provided that they agree before the Ministry of Foreign Relations to consider themselves nationals in respect of their holdings, and not to invoke the protection of any foreign government under penalty of losing their properties to the government."

Vegetable Hash: Put two table-spoons of bacon fat in a frying pan and when it is sizzling, turn upon it the following mixture: To three cups of cold, mashed white potatoes add one cup of cold-cooked and diced carrots, one cup of canned peas and one cup of cooked beets cut small. Season with salt and pepper. Press the mixture down firmly in the pan and let it brown on one side. Then turn it over with a spatula to brown on the reverse side before serving, very hot. (Chopped celery or other bits of left-over vegetables may be added if desired.)

cup of butter and one-half cup of brown sugar. Stir in one whole egg and beat till smooth. Dissolve one teaspoon of baking soda in one-half cup of warm water, then turn this half-cup of water into one cup of New Orleans molasses. Add the molasses to the mixing bowl and stir in two cups of flour which you have previously sifted with one and one-half teaspoons of ground cinnamon, and a pinch of salt. When mixed smooth, add three-quarters of a pound of dates measured after they have been stoned and cut small. Then turn all into greased dripping pan and bake in a moderate oven 30 or 35 minutes. Serve hot, with butter.

Chicken Pot Pie Have your butcher clean and disjoint a three-pound fowl Use an iron pot if you have one; in it try out one-half cup of cubed, fat salt pork. Then add the chicken pieces, browning them well on all sides. After this, add four cups of boiling water and cover the pot, placing it over mild heat so that it will merely simmer for about three hours—or till the fowl is tender. Now add five table-spoons of flour previously REMEMBER, how it used to be when you could hardly wait for mealtime? And then, sit down and eat several helpings of everything—enjoy every morsel and get up from the table feeling satisfied with the World, happy with everybody and ready for anything?

But what a difference in living when even the sight and smell of food sickens you! Never hungry—no matter how tempting the food is—nothing tasting right. And then, after nibbling at a few bites, feeling worse than ever.

Oh, life is hardly worth living this way. And yet, all in the World the matter with you is that you are starving for rich, red blood. And it is acknowledged everywhere that S. S. S. helps Nature build these healthy red-blood-cells by the millions!

All you need to do to get back that wonderful appetite is to build rich, red-blood-cells with S. S. S. It's simple. Just try it, like thousands are doing every day. See for yourself what S. S. S. will do. S. S. S. means blood with a punch—brimful of new life and energy. Get your S. S. S. at any good druggist. The larger size is more economical.

The Drain of Detours

A DETOUR sign made necessary by road repairs isn't a sign of improvement—it is simply evidence that your money, as a taxpayer, is being spent for upkeep.

Note how rarely you find a detour sign on a street or road modernly paved with vitrified brick—and how often you meet them on highways paved with materials which were claimed to be "cheaper". Don't be fooled by first costs—it is your tax-money which must pay for upkeep and repairs.

RISKS

The other evening I read an essay by George Edward Woodberry about the faith of a great American and I came across this sentence: "The willingness to take risks is one gauge of faith. Risk is a part of God's game, alike for men and nations."

My mind runs back to a little company of men who followed the heroic Columbus as he sailed with those three small craft from the shores of Spain.

Lieut. Commander Green, in his wonderfully thrilling story, "Our Naval Heritage," just published, opens the first chapter with this statement: "It cost Columbus $2115 to discover America, pro rated as follows:

Equipment of fleet $900.00
Upkeep of General Staff 115.00
Food and wages of crew 315.00
Arms and ammunition 750.00"

I wonder how many Americans have ever fairly thought about what Columbus risked for an idea?

I lean back in my easy chair, surrounded by books in a spot of beauty that is but a little foot-track in this great America. I close my eyes,

What do I hear in mind? These words of that intrepid Italian: "Sail on, and on—and on!"

Risks? But what are risks when human character sets out with an idea in its hand?

No wonder people bare their heads when they first look upon Plymouth rock.

A wreck isn't the saddest sight in life. The saddest sight in this world is to see a great ship at anchor, afraid to head toward a far-off port.

The sad thing is to refuse to try to do the thing you believe that you can do. To lose is not the answer to failure.

Did the ministry and influence of Christ end with 30 odd years that the Cross terminated?

I wonder how many know that thousands of feet blood-tracked what is now the great middle west of America, simply because they believed that fertile lands lay beyond—the possible homes for millions at that time yet unborn? A few turned back, as is always the case, a sufficient number of sturdy pioneers strode on.

Risks? They are life's bread and butter!

This, it is said, forms a mathematical analysis of the subconscious personality of the subject.

House ways and means committee is conducting hearings in Washington on revision of revenue act of 1924, in the hope of finding ways and means of cutting Uncle Sam's tax bill. Secretary of Treasury Mellon is seen reading a statement to the body on the condition of national finances. In the center, seated, is William R. Green of Iowa, chairman of committee.

Yanks Seek Adventure in Trackless Jungle in Plane

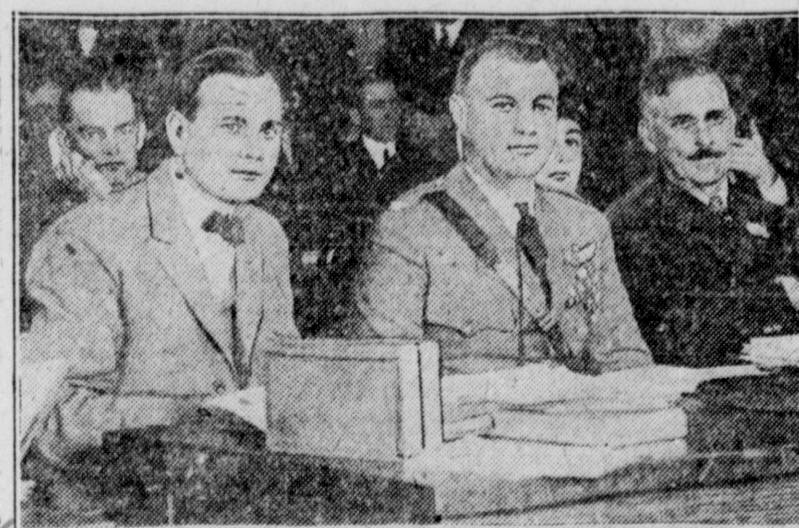

Five young Americans are preparing to fly into jungles of Dutch New Guinea, penetrated only once before by white men. The expedition is being sponsored by the Smithsonian Institution, Washington. Its route from Chicago to San Francisco is by air, from there by boat to the "jumping off" place. Plane and crew are shown: (l. to r.), P. A. Hamer, mechanic; S. A. Hedburg, historian; Tony Yakey, pilot; Hans S. Hoyte, photographer; R. K. Peck, second pilot.

No End(s) to Tad's Troubles at Yale

If Tad Jones gives Yale its third undefeated team in three years he will deserve the "miracle man" title, in the opinion of close followers of the Blue team. He must find men to replace the great pair of ends; Bingham and Luman. Ducky Pond is gone. And Captain Johnny Joss has sinus trouble and may not play his best until mid-season. Above are four of the men on whom Jones is depending. Cobble Sturhahn, guard last season, is now at center and, judging from his early work he is headed for fame.

HARBOR FLAMES and FIREBOATS

ON the wall of the dimly-illuminated assembly room of Fire Station No. 51 a bell begins striking in quick, staccato periods. One, one three—one, one three—one, one three—A song rattles, sending its brassy clamor into every corner of the building. Upstairs, in the cot room, there is the thump of men springing from their beds, a confusion of voices, the stir of sudden arousing.

Lights spring up and down the shining brass pole come sliding man after man in quick succession, struggling into outer garments as they descend. The door onto the wharf is flung open, letting in a blast of wintry air. Along-side, riding upon the dark water, is the fire boat, long and clean of deck with a dim plume of steam floating away on the night wind. Heavy masses of smoke already are pouring from her funnel.

Like boarding buccaniers the men swarm over the rail. The moorings are cast off with a splash and the water under the stern is churned to a white froth. Shaking under the urge of her powerful engines, she swings away from the dock and noses out into the blackness of the Upper Bay.

A Bad Prospect
Far away, down near the Narrows, there is a mounting red glare upon the water, its source hidden by a mass of shipping which stands outlined against it in hard silhouette. With every minute it spreads and grows brighter, touching the sky with its angry glow. The highlands of St. George are lit with it as though by a rosy dawn. Over the whole, blacker than the starless firmament itself, looms a belying pall of smoke.

The veteran Deputy Chief in command peers long through his night glasses from the eminence of the bridge.

"Oil," he says, and shakes his head. "Oil, hardest of fires to control!"

The ship cuts through the water at a full twelve knot clip, sheering through scattered pans of ice with a continual grinding crunch. Everywhere on board there is the activity of calm and systematic preparation. Men are busied at the pipe stands, with the reels, looking to equipment, setting everything in order for the approaching attack. And everywhere are the excited chief, turning his flashlight here, there within and without, marshalling his forces like a good general who leaves nothing to chance.

Below decks, in a hold as full of machinery as a destroyer, the engineers are nursing the oil-burning boilers. The roar of the forced draught sounds a hoarse diapason beneath the wash of water alongside and the hiss and throb of the engines. On the steam gauge, heart and pulse of the vessel the needle creeps steadily upward to two hundred pounds. There will be no lack of pressure for the greedy pumps, no failure of water when the time comes.

The glare grows brighter, they are closer now. Between them and the fire lies only the towering fabric of a full-rigged ship, riding high out of the water, with the lurid glare flickering upon her lofty spars. Over the sharp line of her bulwarks there is a brief glimpse of distant flame darting tongues of fire high into the air.

Into the Dragon's Mouth
Under her towering counter they sweep, into the full light of the conflagration. It is a burning steamship, anchored and deserted, from whose fore hatch a veritable volcano of fire is belching upwards. Even at two hundred yards distance the heat of it is apparent. As they approach, a sheet of brighter flame spurts from the opening with a dull concussion. A moment later another follows. Rounding under the flank of the blazing vessel, they find a small launch bobbing, in which is seated a small, distracted Spaniard, the captain of the ship. What is the cargo? Oil? Carumba, no! Gasoline, in cans. There is no hope for his boat, and the Senior Admiral had better keep away. As for him, the blessed saints would testify that he has always been the most unfortunate of mortals. There is nobody on the ship; it is likely to blow up at any moment. For Dios!

Prepare to Board!
Thus informed as to the general nature and disposition of the cargo, the Chief gives orders to lay alongside. With a crashing hiss fourteen streams of water open upon the flames. Preparations are made to go aboard. If the ship is to be saved it will be necessary to close the water-tight bulkheads and flood the burning hold.

A dangling jacks-ladder rattles and bangs against the ship's side. Up goes the chief, followed by three picked men, clad head to foot in rubber. Everywhere there is unbroken darkness except on deck where the light of the fire itself penetrates in shadowy gleams. The cabins and ladder-wells are black caverns of acrid smoke, encumbered with abandoned gear, tortuous and confusing.

Slowly they work their way below, groping along walls and through doorways, preceded by the probing finger of light from the flashlight slung on the wrist of the Chief. Down and ever down, while the roar of the fire comes to them muffled but menacing through the steel bowels of the ship, and the suffocating smoke grows thicker and hotter in the inky passages.

A Black Inferno
At increasingly frequent intervals the vessel is shaken by detonations as can after can of gasoline explodes. The heat is overpowering, searing their skin and parching their lungs. All is blackness, there is no air; the metal plates on every side are blistering to the touch. And always the dread thought: which of these explosions will be the last, the final one?

Along the floor of the ship they work their way, with Death walking at their heels. The flashlight ray falls on a bulkhead door. It is beginning to glow with heat, but they close and lock it. Staggering and gasping, they stumble on to the others, swing them to and press home the bolts. Then back to the ladder to begin the painful, exhausting climb back to the light, and the air, and life.

Up and up, clinging to the iron rungs, groaning, calling to each other through the darkness and the smoke—up and up, following the moving spot of light in the hands of the Chief through the maze of abandoned saloons and unfamiliar stairs, up to the main deck and the sweet breath of the salt breeze.

Reinforcements Arrive
Rising now above the fierce tumult of the flames they hear another, more powerful note, the sibilant roar of water pouring from a score of points in to the white-hot pit of the fore hold, and the deep throb and murmur of the pumps as four fire boats turn their strength to the attack. 45,000 gallons of water a minute are crashing into the heart of the blaze.

Gradually the ship begins to feel the weight of water which is flooding in-board at the rate of 176 tons a minute. As the fore hold fills she begins to settle at the bow, sinking lower and lower. For hours the powerful streams are focused upon the hatch, which continues to pour out in scarcely diminished volume its geyser of flame. Then, with a farewell burst of smoke and steam, and a great gurgling whirl of water, the bulkheads dip beneath the surface.

At the depth of five fathoms the keel takes the ground, leaving the superstructure and the stern high in the air. The fire is out, and the ship, though damaged, is saved.

Fireboats in New York harbor attacking a dangerous blaze in a steamship hold, caused by the burning and explosion of thousands of cans of gasoline. (Below) Deputy Chief Edward J. Worth, head of the Marine Division of the New York Fire Department, with some of his men.

Such is the daily portion of the sea-going firemen of the New York Fire Department, to whose keeping has been given the safety of the billions of dollars worth of shipping and the 746 miles of wharfage in the world's greatest sea-port.

Some idea of the magnitude of the task confronting the Marine Division may be gained from a survey of its domain. Merely to steam along the 578-mile shoreline which they guard requires a long day's journey, lasting from dawn until after dark. In addition to the extensive waterfront of Manhattan Island itself, 43 miles in circumference, there is the far, inviolated shore of Long Island, from Ambrose Channel Lightship opposite Sandy Hook, to Sand's Point, on the Sound, including the five-mile inlet of Newtown Creek, lined with oil works and chemical plants.

There is the long expanse to the north reaching from the Sound along the outer bank of the Harlem River to Yonkers on the Hudson, and to the south the tremendous circle of Staten Island, 51 miles around, and the many islands in the upper and lower bay, together with all the thousands of craft of every description which throng its waters.

A Busy Life
Every alarm along this far-flung waterfront which means every alarm originating within two blocks of the water, is answered by the Marine Division. Ten fireboats are always on duty with steam up and cleared for action. And when serious fires occur on the Jersey shore they rally to the attack, or with the prevailing westerly winds blazing vessels have been known to burn through their moorings and drift over to the New York side, playing havoc with the wharves and shipping.

An average of 200 ships a year catch fire in New York Harbor, and about 60 wharves and piers. These last, though rarer occurrences, are apt to be serious—particularly in winter when the extreme cold and exposed position freezes the shore feed pipes. Then it is that the tars of the Fire Department must bear the brunt of the battle.

Under cover of the streams' playing from the boat—the fireman knew the creeping barrage long before the soldier dreamed of it—they go onto the dock, into the impenetrable darkness of the great shed, densely filled with smoke. As always, the Chief or officer leads, appraising the situation with the aid of his flashlight, and directing the men, who come dragging their "pipes" to the designated spot.

Then the signal is passed back for water and the great streams go crashing into the roots of the advancing fire, while over the men themselves descends a sailing veil of salt water from the supporting pipes, very much like Mercy, which as everyone knows, "falleth like the gentle rain from heaven upon the place beneath." In this case, in the face of a roaring tornado of flame, it is not twice blessed, but in all probability, seven or eight times, according to the number of individuals wetted.

The Touch of Death
Sometimes, when the fire feeds upon certain chemicals, or—worst of all, lute or hemp fibre—the smoke is so laden with deadly poisons that it would be death for a man to go into it. It is one of the first duties of the officer in command to determine if possible the nature of the burning material, for to face a gas attack of this sort would spell disaster to the brave men, whose calling is dangerous enough as it is. Most experienced firemen, however, can determine the nature of the fire with fair accuracy from the color of the smoke and the way it burns.

Despite the fact that fires are on the increase in this country, including New York City, the efficiency of the Department manages to keep pace with the demands upon it. 90% of all fires are confined to the point of origin.

ARGENTINE RELIGIOUS LEADER IS JAILED FOR TEACHING HE IS SECOND SAVIOUR

Buenos Aires, Nov. 2.—Jose Vespaciano, founder of a new Christian cult here which has secured the unwavering devotion of its followers, is detained by the police because he believes he is the Son of God.

Jose Vespaciano lived in a humble dwelling in the Calle Margaritas, Cerretas, which was furnished with the chairs and tables made by his dexterous hands. Here in a narrow patio, among scrawny plants and flowers, the new apostle preached his doctrine of the Bible to his little horde of followers who for the most part consisted of old men and women, some of which he had cured of ailments. But there were people in the neighborhood who complained of his fanaticism to the police with the result that he is now confined.

In appearance he is not unlike the Nazarene, who founded the Christian religion. He has dark brown eyes, chestnut hair and beard. He is always clad in loose, robe-like clothing creating the impression that he has just stepped from one of the stained-glass windows of the great Catholic cathedrals here.

On being interviewed following his apprehension, he merely said with a tone of spiritual resignation, "History repeats itself. The people of today would not permit that I preach the Christian doctrine of peace and love, because they are treading the material path of pleasure and wantonness, heedless of the Word of God. I do not bear my enemies' resentment because they know not what they do."

His followers clamor futilely for his liberty, pointing out the benefits that they derived from his ministrations of service and declaring a number of his phenomenal cures have been miracles. Without other than water, mystic words and prayers, he is said to have cured members of his faithful band of the most loathsome diseases.

On the other hand the police doctors assert that he is merely suffering from a mental derangement which makes him believe he is the new Christ. These men of science add that the annals of abnormal psychology are filled with such examples of monomania. One of the doctors said, however, with regard to the case of Vespaciano, as follows:

"I sincerely believe that if he lived during the Twelfth Century he would have been heralded as a saint, but as it is he is seized as a lunatic."

Jose Vespaciano believes fully in the divine origin of Jesus of Nazareth, but he also believes that he himself has been appointed by God as a sort of second savior to bring righteousness into the world. He asserts that civilization is becoming too advanced and too complicated for the morals of the people and that the only path to salvation is the return to the simplicity of faith, hope and charity.

The Argentine apostle points to the labor disputes and strikes throughout the world, the unrest in Europe, the Moroccan difficulties, the Syrian disturbances, the Chinese troubles and the immorality prevalent among all peoples as proof that civilization is the worst dressed Spaniard in the hall, not progressing but rather deteriorating.

MUSIC PUBLISHER, ONCE TEACHER HERE, SUCCUMBS LAST WEEK
Theodore Presser, 77, widely known music publisher, formerly a teacher in the Xenia Music Conservatory, located on West Third Street, died last week at the Samaritan Hospital, Philadelphia, Pa.

Mr. Presser lived at 121 West Johnson Street, Germantown, Pa., and had been in the Philadelphia Hospital a week. He suffered a stroke May 10 and partially recovered until the fatal attack.

He was head of Theodore Presser and Company, a large music publishing house and founder of the "Etude," a music publication. Born of parents of German extraction, in Pittsburgh, July 3, 1848, Mr. Presser, at the age of 16 became a music clerk in a Pittsburgh store. Four years later he became its manager and then entered a college in Ohio. Two years later he entered his career as a music teacher at the Xenia Conservatory.

He later studied at the New England Conservatory in Boston and in 1878 went abroad and studied at the Leipzig Conservatory under Jadasohn and other renowned teachers. Two years later he became a tutor in the Hollins Institute, Hollins, Va., and then left the teaching routine and devoted himself to musical literature.

With a capital of $250 he established the "Etude" in 1883 and from a little third-story backroom in Philadelphia, the "Etude" grew to be one of the largest publications of its kind in the world.

In 1893, in an address before the State Teachers' National Association which he had founded, Mr. Presser first expressed his intention of founding a home for retired music teachers. In 1906, a house was opened in Philadelphia and in 1911 with an outlay of $1,000,000, including endowment, he started the Presser Home for Retired Music Teachers in Germantown. It was the first institution of its kind in this country and with kindred philanthropies of Mr. Presser, it administered by the Presser Foundation, organized by him in 1917. The Presser Foundation is headed by James Francis Cooke of Baltimore.

In 1917, Mr. Presser began the construction near Yeagor, Delaware, County, Pa., of a model village for employees of the Presser Publishing House. The development was one of the first of its kind in the east and was not completed on account of the World War. It is now known as Langacre Park.

Mr. Presser's wife died in November 1923. On the maternal side, she was a member of the Polk family of Tennessee, of which President Polk was a member.

money box over Sunday and little value was taken.

MASQUERS IN REVEL AT CELEBRATION OF HALLOWE'EN HERE

The largest crowd that has filled Xenia Streets for some time witnessed the most elaborate Halloween demonstration in several years, here Saturday night. Sponsored by the Kiwanis and Rotary Clubs and Company L Band, the carnival program was successfully staged and masses of merry-makers thronged the streets throughout the evening.

Masqueraders assembled at 7 o'clock for the parade, the main feature of the evening. A long line of boys and girls and grown ups marched in line with three bands and a drum corps. People lined every street in the main business section for the parade.

After traversing the center of the city, the revelers filed passed the judges' stand, located in front of the Court House, where coupons were distributed to chosen persons for merchandise prizes offered by Xenia business houses.

Forty prize coupons were given out for various types of masques and the masqueraders received handsome gifts when they presented their coupons to merchants.

A cake-walk was staged on the Court House platform following the parade, where O. D. Sadders received a five dollar prize as the best "stepper." Mary F. Valentine won second prize among the dancers and Harvey Johnston came in third for dancing the Southern jig. Revelers danced on the sidewalk after the featured dances, with music furnished by Company L Band.

The revelry continued until a late hour. Beautiful and grotesque costumes vied in interest through the streets all evening. Masqueraders and those not masked combined in the merry-making and the enjoyment that marked previous Halloween celebrations in Xenia permeated the latest effort.

CHURCH DAMAGED IN SUNDAY BLAZE

Fire caused by an overheated furnace resulted in about $100 damage to the Zion Baptist Church, East Main Street, Sunday morning at 7 o'clock. The blaze was confined to the upper part of the furnace beneath the stair case, and was extinguished by firemen with chemicals.

Fire broke out as the church was being heated for the morning services and although filling the building with smoke did not interfere with the services. Interior of the newly decorated church was slightly damaged by smoke.

FEW VOTERS USE ABSENTEE BALLOTS

The absentee ballot vote for the municipal elections in the county Tuesday was exceptionally light, it was reported by officials of the board of elections after a checkup had been made, Monday.

Twenty-eight votes were cast by licensed voters in the county expecting to be absent from the county on election day when the time limit expired Saturday at midnight, it is announced. Other ballots mailed on or before Saturday but not yet received will be counted, it is said.

If the absentee ballot vote may be taken as a criterion of the vote to be cast at the election Tuesday, a light vote will be recorded over the county officials say.

More than 100 voters availed themselves of absentee ballots at the last presidential election when interest was at a higher pitch.
